

Santa's workshop goes green

The most popular children's event Santa's Workshop held at the Cinnamon Grand recently turned out to be a great success, with more than 200 children enjoying the event. It was a world of wonderment for the children with bustling work stations and thrilling new surprises at every corner of the workshop – giving the children memories to take home for a happy season.

On Santa's instructions, the Workshop was environmentally responsible. Used wrapping paper, old magazines and remnants of party decorations were turned into special something much to the delight of the young ones. This was Santa's way of teaching them to cultivate the recycling habit. The Naughty list handled by elf Alabaster snowball, a make your own Christmas Teddy Bear, the art of making recycled note pads and receive to turn out their own brand of chocolate were some of the many secrets of Santa Claus' that children learnt about that day.
