Build up your relationship gradually

With all ups and downs in life working out your relationship or keeping your relationship strong would definitely be a challenge in one's life. I think there is not a single relationship which would flow smoothly everyday in the same manner. But this does not mean the relationship is languishing. To keep it stronger I would suggest three elements true lovers should be aware of, it's love, hope and confidence.

'Love' is the most influential out of all three. It contains all what you feel for your lover mentally and physically. Whether he or she is in a cheerful or blue mood it always helps one to make things right or better. It is the strength to overcome your day to day obstacles, challenges failures and most of all true love can heal the pain. Dear lovers, the only and the most beautiful way to win the world or to have the world at your feet is to love your partner and keep building the 'confidence' with each other.

The second method is to build 'confidence' with him or her. To overcome the negative feelings such as doubts, jealousy or your fears in life would help you to share or find solutions where one would not feel lonely or lost even during splintering moments in life. Dear lovers remember the confidence that you're building with your partner is the confidence that you build with your self. With the two elements I have mentioned above, there is one more important element, 'hope'.

Loving 'hopes' are necessary in a relationship. Each other's passions and dreams are to be built is essential. Hopes can play magic in a relationship, this is what keeps you get going day by day. These three elements are tangled together, so to build a strong and ever lasting relationship try building these elements and then after a short period of time gradually your relationship would grow with love, confidence and hope.
